

"The guys always complained, but they certainly did strut around in their tuxes. At school we would ask them what color they were getting, and they would be almost as excited as us girls were about our dresses. They might not have showed it as much, but if you just watched them they would say one thing and do another. Girls weren't afraid to be honest about that kind of stuff."

—LuAnn Miller